Assignment 1 - YouTubeTrender Application Description

Student Name: Joel Pillar-Rogers Student Id: 2017545 Student FAN: pill0032

This document describes my design process for the YouTubeTrender application. The application parses YouTube video data downloaded from the YouTube API in the JSON format. Figure 1 displays the classes and relationships for my application (methods and fields removed).

I made an early decision to keep as much code out of the main method (in YouTubeTrender) as possible, mostly using it to call the methods of other classes or to call test methods from its own class.

Phase 1 (Parser):

In this first phase I designed the YouTubeDataParser, YouTubeVideo and YouTubeDataParserException classes.

I decided to make the Parser an instantiateable object, rather than a class which provided static methods. This class is built around an ArrayList which holds YouTubeVideo objects. The Parser has a primary public method, parse, which takes the filename of a JSON data file provided when it is called by the main method.

To keep the code clean and understandable, I have split the task of the parse method into two parts, to be done in separate private methods. The parseJson method parses the JSON data file and saves it to a Java data structure, JsonArray. The convertJsonArray takes this JsonArray and converts it to a standard ArrayList, called "ytVideoList". I did this so that I could be working with familiar data structures from this point on. Figures 3 and 4 show code snippets from these two helper methods.

One drawback of this process was that the parseJson method didn't work well with a Json file that had a single Json Object that wasn't in a list. To get around this I created a separate method, populateSingleVideo, which is activated by the boolen "array". This method both converts and populates a single video of this type.

The Parser also has printer methods, get methods and sort methods (more in Phase 2). The printer methods are an ease of life feature, while the getVideo method makes individual videos in the ArrayList accessible from outside this object.

private JsonArray parseJson(String filename) throws FileNotFoundException, JsonParsingException {
    JsonReader jsonReader = Json.createReader(new FileInputStream(filename));
    JsonObject jobj = jsonReader.readObject(); JsonArray items;
    if (jobj.getJsonArray("items") == null) {
        array = false;
    }
    items = jobj.getJsonArray("items");
    return items;
```

private void convertJsonArray(JsonArray items) throws NullPointerException { YouTubeVideo tempVid; for (int i = 0; i < items.size(); i++) { tempVid = new YouTubeVideo(); JsonObject snippet = video.getJsonObject("snippet");
        tempVid.setPublishedAt(snippet.getString("publishedAt"));
        tempVid.setChannelId(snippet.getString("channelId"));
        tempVid.setTitle(snippet.getString("title"));
        tempVid.setDescription(snippet.getString("description"));
        tempVid.setChannelTitle(snippet.getString("channelTitle"));
        tempVid.setCategoryId(snippet.getString("categoryId"));

This class holds all the data associated with an individual video. I decided to grab all of the provided fields for each video in case these became useful later on. I saved the statistics fields (views, likes, etc) as ints to allow for calculations later on. The class has the standard getter and setter methods for each field and overrides the toString method to allow for nice looking printouts of lists of videos.

YouTubeDataParserException

The final task of the first phase was to build a robust exception framework. I identified several exceptions that seemed likely to be thrown by the methods of my application, including:

- the FileNotFoundException if the filename is entered incorrectly,
- the JsonParsingException if the JSON file is corrupted,
- the NullPointerException when a field is missing in a JSON file,
- the ArrayIndexOutOfBoundsException when an uninitialised Array index is called.

The first three were possible when calling the parse method, while the fourth exception was more likely when accessing Videos for printing or indexing later on.

I didn't find a need to define YouTubeDataParsingException for a specific exception instance, so instead I used it to group the first three exceptions above and propagate them up to the main method, where they are caught using a try/catch block.

In the class itself I extended the Exception class and overrode the default constructor to take the "message" field from the exception classes above and assign them to the inherited message field. This allows more appropriate messages to be printed to the user. Figure 6 has a code snippet from the YouTubeDataParsingException class, while Figure 7 shows the implementation in the Parser class.

public class YouTubeDataParserException extends Exception { public YouTubeDataParserException(String message) {

        super(message);
    }
}
```

```
public void parse(String filename) throws YouTubeDataParserException { try { JsonArray items = parseJson(filename);
            //...SOME MORE CODE...
    } catch (FileNotFoundException fnte) { throw new YouTubeDataParserException(fnte.getMessage()); } catch (JsonParsingException jpe) { throw new YouTubeDataParserException("Corrupted Json File: " + jpe.getMessage()); } catch (NullPointerException npe) { throw new YouTubeDataParserException("Null field encountered when populating parser array.");
    }
}

Phase 2 (Sorter):

In this phase I designed the Comparator classes (Figure 8) and implemented the sort methods in YouTubeDataParser.

Each comparator class compares two YouTubeVideos based on a field. These classes implement the Comparator interface, which requires a compare abstract method to be overridden. The string fields are compared in this method using the build-in string method compareTo, while the int fields are compared using a simple subtraction calculation.

The Comparator classes allow the YouTubeVideos in the ytVideoList of the Parser to be compared and so sorted. There is a sortbyX method associated with each Comparator in the Parser.

The sorter methods use the built-in Collections.sort method, which takes a Collection and a Comparator as parameters.

For interest, I implemented several comparators and sorters in addition to those requested. For instance, the sortByLikeRatio method compares the "like" to "dislike" ratio for each video.

At this stage I implemented additional print methods in the Parser to allow clearer printing of these sorted lists. The printDescription method only prints the video title and description, with some added space and formatting between each video, as descriptions can be very large (equally for the printLikes method).

Figures 9 and 10 shows code snippets for a Comparator class and a sortbyX method.

public class YouTubeVideoChannelComparator implements Comparator<YouTubeVideo> {

    @Override public int compare(YouTubeVideo v1, YouTubeVideo v2) { return v1.getChannelTitle().compareTo(v2.getChannelTitle());
    }
}
```

public void sortByDate() {
    Collections.sort(ytVideoList, new YouTubeVideoDateComparator());
}

Phase 3 (Indexer):

In phase 3 I designed the YouTubeVideoIndexer and the YouTubeWordItem.

This class stores data on words found in the Title and Description of YouTubeVideos. Each object has a String, "word", which saves a single word (or sequence of characters without a space). The class also has an int, "count", which records the number of times the word appeared in the list of videos submitted to the Parser. Finally, the class has a Set (instantiated as a HashSet) of "videos" in which the "word" appeared.

The YouTubeWordItem class has some standard getters and setters for its variables, including addPost to add a YouTubeVideo to the Set of "videos". The class also implements the Comparable interface and overrides the abstract compareTo method inherited from that interface. This allows WordItems to be compared and thus sorted, with the comparison based on how many times the word was used in the video set.

There is a toString override to print the WordItems in a nice format and a printPosts method to print the set of YouTubeVideos that are associated with the key word (this latter method relies on the toString method of YouTubeVideos).

YouTubeVideondexer (Figure 12)

This class takes a YouTubeDataParser object and extracts data to create YouTubeWordItems, which are stored in a HashMap ("wordHash"). It can sort these WordItems through use of an ArrayList ("wordList").

In designing this class, I again debated whether to make it a class with static indexing methods but eventually decided to make it instatiateable. I also debated whether to pass a standard List as a parameter to the primary index method, to make it a useful method outside this program, but eventually decided on passing a Parser object to give me greater customisation options.

I decided to use a HashMap to initially store the WordItems, to allow for rapid access and searching. I decided to use an ArrayList for better indexing, sorting and printing.

The HashMap is populated by concatenating the Title and Description of each video into a single String. This String is then read by a Scanner object, using the hasNext and next methods, deliminated by spaces. Each word is saved as a new YouTubeWordItem object. The HashMap stores these YouTubeWordItems as its elements and uses the associated word String as its keys. If a word already has an associated YouTubeWordItem, then the "count" of that item is instead increased by 1.

The ArrayList is populated using the built-in HashMap method values and it is sorted using the Collections method sort.

Finally, the class has a few ease-of-life methods, including a couple of printX methods to access elements of its collections and the getMostUsedWord and countUniqueWords methods, which output exactly as their name suggests. Figures 13 and 14 provide some code snippets from this class.

public void index(YouTubeDataParser ytParser) { String wordString;
    for (int i = 0; i < ytParser.size(); i++) { wordString = ytParser.getVideo(i).getTitle() + " " + ytParser.getVideo(i).getDescription(); Scanner s = new Scanner(wordString);
        while (s.hasNext()) { String word = s.next();
            if (wordHash.containsKey(word)) {
                wordHash.get(word).addCount(1);
                wordHash.get(word).addPost(ytParser.getVideo(i));
            } else {
                wordHash.put(word, new YouTubeWordItem(word));
                wordHash.get(word).addPost(ytParser.getVideo(i));

```
public ArrayList<YouTubeWordItem> getSortedWordItems() {
    try{ wordList = new ArrayList(wordHash.values());
    Collections.sort(wordList);
    mostUsedWord = wordList.get(0);
    }catch(IndexOutOfBoundsException ioobe){
        System.out.println("There are no WordItems in this HashMap");
    }

Phase 4 (Demonstrations and Testing):

There are several elements to my testing.

1. As I developed my code, I continuously printed the results of operations to the terminal.
2. Throughout my program I placed code to print the time taken for each operation. This allows me to see where bottlenecks might be and suggest ways to rearrange the code or different data structures to use.
3. After completing my code, I designed six tests to demonstrate my code was acting as intended and not throwing up unexpected errors.

The following tests can be run by uncommenting the relevant line of code in the main method. In general, I have specified "youtubedata_15_50.json" as the default file to parse unless otherwise specified.

Test 1: Test the parsing code with the original file

This test can be performed by running parseTest(ytParser). It demonstrates that the parsing methods of YouTubeDataParser and YouTubeVideos are working correctly. This test will print out all the details of the first video in the Json file, to show that all the fields are being parsed correctly and also prints an out-of-range video to show how the program handles that.

Finally, it prints an unordered list of the videos in the default file and confirms the number of videos parsed is as expected (50 in the default case).

The output of this test can be seen in Appendix B - Test 1 Results.

Test 2: Test the parsing code with every file

This test can be performed by running parseTestAll(). It runs the parser over every file provide for the assignment and also tries to run the parser over a missing file. Again, this method prints all the details of the first video in the list (if one exists) and basic details for the full list of videos.

This test demonstrates the exception catching (and the exception avoiding) code in the program. The printout shows messages returned to the user for all 6 files and the missing files.

The output of this test can be seen in Appendix B - Test 2 Results.

Test 3: Test the sorting code

This test can be performed by running sortTest(ytParser). It prints the results of five of the sort methods, including Date, Channel Title, Views, Like Ratio and Description Length.

It is a very long printout (particularly Description Length) but it possible to see for each sort result that the sort is working as intended.

The output of this test can be seen in Appendix B - Test 3 Results.

Test 4: Test the indexing code (with the index test file)

This test can be performed by running indexerTest(). It demonstrates that the YouTubeVideoIndexer is working correctly. The test is performed on the "youtubedata_indextest.json" file so that the results can be easily verified. The prinout includes all of the fields from the (only) video in this list, as well as the words and word count from the Title and Description.

The output of this test can be seen in Appendix B - Test 4 Results.

Test 5: Test the index finding code

This test can be performed by running indexFinderTest(ytIndexer). It runs the indexer over a Parser of the default file. It then searches for a single word and prints its occurrence count and associated videos. To test robustness, it also searches for a word that is not in this file to show how the program handles this.

The output of this test can be seen in Appendix B - Test 5 Results.

Test 6: Test the index counting code

This test can be performed by running indexSorterTest(ytIndexer). It again runs the indexer over a Parser of the default file. It prints out a very long list of every word in the default file, its occurrence count and associated videos count. This list can be compared with the expected outcome provided for this assignment to show that the lists are identical.

Finally, this test prints out the most used word and the unique word count, to demonstrate those methods.

The output of this test can be seen in Appendix B - Test 6 Results.

Title: Why do cats act so weird? - Tony Buffington

Description:

View full lesson: http://ed.ted.com/lessons/why-do-cats-act-so-weird-tony-buffington

They’re cute, they’re lovable, and judging by the 26 billion views on over 2 million YouTube videos of them, one thing is certain: cats are very entertaining. But their strange feline behaviors, both amusing and baffling, leave many of us asking: Why do cats do that? Tony Buffington explains the science behind some of your cat’s strangest behaviors.

Title: Jellyfish: April 24, 2016

Description:

This stunningly beautiful jellyfish was seen during Dive 4 of the 2016 Deepwater Exploration of the Marianas expedition on April 24, 2016, while exploring the informally named "Enigma Seamount" at a depth of ~3,700 meters.

Scientists identified this hydromedusa as belonging to the genus Crossota. Note the two sets of tentacles — short and long. At the beginning of the video, you'll see that the long tentacles are even and extended outward and the bell is motionless. This suggests an ambush predation mode. Within the bell, the radial canals in red are connecting points for what looks like the gonads in bright yellow.

Video courtesy of the NOAA Office of Ocean Exploration and Research, 2016 Deepwater Exploration of the Marianas.

To start saving, place a coin on the white fish bone plate. You'll hear a cat purr before the shy feline reaches from inside the box to grab the coin and take it inside his cardboard home. When it's time to cash out, a removable hatch on the bottom grants access to the haul.

If your little coin collector loves furry felines, it only makes "cents" to use this electronic cat-themed bank!

Title: Can PEE Cure Ant Stings?!

Description:

Please SUBSCRIBE NOW! http://bit.ly/BWchannel

Watch More - http://bit.ly/BTfireants

On this week's Behind the Adventure, Coyote answers the question if PEE is indeed a good cure for Fire Ant stings?!

It has long been rumored and advocated that ones own pee can be used as a natural antidote to many forms of venomous stings and bites…and if you're stuck in the wilderness without a first-aid kit, it might just be your only option.

So to see if the myth is true Coyote Peterson will attempt to use his own urine to extinguish the burning pain of over 300 freshly inflicted Fire Ant stings.

Get ready for quite possibly the most disgusting video we'll ever make…and YES that IS 100% PEE!

The Brave Wilderness Channel is your one stop connection to a wild world of adventure and amazing up close animal encounters!

Follow along with adventurer and animal expert Coyote Peterson and his crew as they lead you on three exciting expedition series - Breaking Trail, Dragon Tails and Coyote's Backyard - featuring everything from Grizzly Bears and Crocodiles to Rattlesnakes and Tarantulas…each episode offers an opportunity to learn something new!

So SUBSCRIBE NOW and join the adventure that brings you closer to the most beloved, bizarre and misunderstood creatures known to man!

Title: GIANT Life Size T-REX Dinosaur vs Park Ranger Aaron In Real Life at Playground in Fun Kids Toy Video

Description:

In this Dino Adventure fun kids video, Park Ranger Aaron is searching for his backpack and Jurassic World Toys at the playground. But a GIANT Life Size T-Rex dinosaur has broken loose at the Jurassic Park and is chasing him. The Tyrannosaurus Rex (T-Rex) is hunting for Aaron near the playground, while Park Ranger LB watches from Jurassic World headquarters. In this video for kids, Aaron finds dinosaur surprise toys including the Stegoceratops, from the movie Jurassic World, and the Interactive T-Rex, from Animal Planet. To escape the T-Rex, Aaron makes a plan to use a flare and whoopee cushion to distract the dinosaur while he sneaks away. Can Aaron leave T-Rex behind and return the toys to LB to unbox in this dinosaur adventure movie?
